Hioki Quits Discussion After
Extra-Territoriality of Nip-ponese Called "Impossible"

[Associated Press by Federal Wireless]
PEKING, China, March 31.—China must yield to Japan before tomorrow or Japan will issue an ultimatum. All developments today point in that direction.

The deadlock has been reached on the question of the extra-territoriality of Japanese immigrants in Manchuria. Minister Hioki, who is conducting the negotiations for Japan, is firm, while President Yuan Shih-kai after a conference with his foreign minister decided that such extra-territoriality was impossible. Minister Hioki then refused to discuss any further. The situation is the most serious since the negotiations began. Hioki's firmness, the Chinese fear, indicates that more pressure will now be brought to bear.

China wavered in its original purpose to discuss only 12 of the articles of the memorandum on Manchuria. The Manchurian question alone was negotiated, Mongolia being reserved for separate discussion.

Six of the articles of the demand dealing with Manchuria have been accepted by both Japan and China with some alterations. There is a controversy over the second article, which deals with Hanyenping. Japan has accepted China's proposal to declare to the Powers its intention not to cede or lease any territory in the future. The reference to "third" power being eliminated, thus putting Japan on the same basis as the others.

China has agreed to appoint Japanese advisers but they will be only in an advisory capacity and will be without authority.

Hawaii's pineapple and sugar business will be threatened with blockade if Congress passes the proposed national child-labor law and this territory meanwhile has not definitely prohibited its children from working in the canneries and in raw sugar production.

Such was the statement made and debated upon by former United States District Attorney Robert W. Breckons yesterday in the course of a public legislative hearing upon child-labor measures. The hearing was called by the house health committee, of which Representative J. H. Coney of Kauai is chairman, and was attended by a very large number of men and women, the latter predominating. The attendance of mothers was especially noteworthy.

Dr. Doremus Scudder, who acted in a way as spokesman for the men and women interested in seeing a child-labor bill passed by this legislature, also dwelt upon the effect here of a national child-labor bill.

Three distinct measures were under consideration at the hearing. The first was the house bill which regulated hours of labor but would allow long hours during the busy pineapple canning season. The second was the Rawlins bill authorizing the board of health to investigate conditions under which child-labor works and where

NEW HOUSE BILL AIMS TO REPLACE SLAUGHTERED 210

Measure to Reform Public Accounting Makes Appearance in New Gaze

Members of the house of representatives who incurred criticism of their vote on House Bill 210, the measure providing for reform in county and territorial finances, will be given another opportunity to go on record for or against such a reform. House Bill 210 was defeated on a close vote early in the week.

Representative Coney yesterday introduced a substitute bill with the alleged objectionable features of H. B. 210 omitted. The new bill, known as House Bill 267 and calls for a probe into the assets of the territory and its subdivisions only, an appraisal of the property owned by the government. It does not include an accounting of the auditor's books of the various counties, which certain members of the house regarded with doubt, according to rumors around the capitol.

Whether House Bill 267 meets the favor of the business organizations which supported House Bill 210 remains to be seen. Unless it provides for thorough reorganization of accounting methods it is likely to be opposed.
